Robonica signs lease at 100 Cummings Center

March 03, 2010 - Front Section

Robonica, a privately-held company with research and development facilities in South Africa, opened its worldwide marketing and commercial headquarters at 100 Cummings Center earlier this year and has already expanded at the office park to meet the demand for additional office, inventory and distribution space.

Seasoned industry executive Tom Dusenberry, Robonica's president, is leading the launch of Roboni-i and this is not the first time he has chosen Cummings Center for a start-up business. "I keep coming back for its central location and numerous amenities," he said.

"Robonica is going to be a fun one to watch," said Justin D'Aveta, leasing/property manager at Cummings Center. "It joins our growing community of start-ups with innovative technologies and impressive leadership. We work hard to meet the unique needs of these companies." Throughout its 40-year history, Cummings Properties has catered to growing companies, offering features such as business and laboratory incubator space, turn-key suites and an expansion space guarantee.
