Compass Facility Services offers a more personalized service and customer contact

January 03, 2008 - Owners Developers & Managers

Daron Greelish of Commonwealth Maintenance (CMS) has announced that as of January 1st, the company became Compass Facility Services.

The family owned and operated janitorial service company has provided high quality facility maintenance to a wide range of commercial, industrial and high tech firms as well as schools and universities for over 30 years.

Greelish notes that the new Compass takes the same old pride in their retention of customer base and commitment of high quality service, and that the name change has transpired merely in conjunction with expansion beyond the New England area.

Brendan Greelish, the company president, along with his brother Daron will continue their tradition of personalized service and customer contact that they consider vital to growth and success.

"Since green cleaning has become such an important and desirable method in the service industry, Compass will continue to keep abreast of innovation, supply and equipment development, and work hand in hand with present and future customers to help them gain LEED certification with their facilities".

In addition to full janitorial services, Compass provides many in-house maintenance needs to better help customers with facility support. Some of these services provided by compass are:
