Lavallee Brensinger Architects receives design award for IDEXX Laboratories corporate facility: Project team includes: Stibler Associates, Deluca Hoffman, Pizzagalli, Souza True and AHA Engineers

March 17, 2011 - Construction Design & Engineering

Lavallee Brensinger Architects received an Honor Award for Excellence in Architecture from the New Hampshire Chapter of the American Institute of Architects for its recent addition to IDEXX Laboratories. IDEXX is a leader in pet healthcare innovation, serving practicing veterinarians around the world with a broad range of diagnostic and information technology-based products and services.

In addition to providing new, laboratory, manufacturing and office space, the project achieved IDEXX's goals of advancing the company's image as an innovative, world-class leader in science and technology, while creating an inspiring work environment that includes a connection to nature. The building's new exterior façade unifies new and existing construction with a clean, white masonry veneer, representing the elegant precision of "science." The expansive exterior is anchored by towers, noting points of entry and vertical interior circulation. Clad with zinc panels, the towers convey an "earthy" feeling and a link to nature.

A unique courtyard or "BioCourt" was created within the core of the massive building, offering employees an outdoor space for meetings, lunch breaks, or respite. Abundant daylight pours into offices in both the addition and existing building. The facility's primary circulation path travels by the BioCourt, allowing a strong visual connection to nature throughout the day.

In addition to IDEXX management and staff and Lavallee Brensinger Architects, other project team members included: Stibler Associates, interior design; DeLuca Hoffman, civil engineering; Souza True and Partners, structural engineers; AHA Engineers, mechanical/electrical engineers; and Pizzagalli Construction, construction manager.

Jurors praised the project as "a great plan integrating old and new; the 'biocourt' is very successful, providing a year round focal point and calming environment, as well as a welcome relief to what could be an overwhelming interior space."
