Diversified Project Management adds three new project managers

June 02, 2011 - Owners Developers & Managers

Diversified Project Management (DPM), one of New England's premier owner's representative firms providing programming, project management, construction administration, FF&E coordination and move-planning services, have added Liz Dalton, NCIDQ, Carlos Lopez and Julia Driesch to its project management staff.

Dalton joins DPM as a full time project manager after several months working on a number of projects on a consulting basis. She previously worked as a designer and project manager with local architectural firms Cubellis Associates and Packard Design. Her focus has been on interiors planning & design, construction & project management and FF&E specification/coordination for corporate, retail, municipal and assisted living spaces.

Lopez has also joined DPM as a project manager. Lopez's career spans several design firms, as well as the Federal Reserve and Fidelity Investments, managing all phases of project deliverables including site due diligence/selection, review of leasing documents, space planning, design supervision, schedule and budget management, construction supervision, corporate services management, FF&E coordination and move management for corporate and retail spaces.

Driesch has been hired as an assistant project manager. Driesch comes to DPM from Wentworth University with a BS in Facilities Planning and Management. She completed her co-op with Harvard Law School and has previously held positions with two local contractors.

"We're excited about the addition of Liz, Carlos and Julia to our staff," said Phil Leonard, DPM's Vice President of Operations. "The wealth of experience they have as individuals in planning & design, construction & project management have a lot to offer our already strong team of project managers."
