January 12, 2012 - Rhode Island

The Economic Development Foundation of Rhode Island (EDFRI) has completed their newest flex building project at 1700 Highland Corporate Dr. in the Highland Corporate Park abutting CVS/Caremark's corporate facilities. The 20,000 s/f building shell can accommodate up to four individual tenants. With 20' high ceiling bays, the individual units can be built out to meet the needs of a mix of uses including light/technical manufacturing, research & development, sales & service, biotech lab and business office uses. The building was constructed with insulated architectural masonry block and is profiled by a dark grey band of dri-design metal panels that accentuates the four separate and prominent blue glass entryways. The building shell has been designed to LEED energy standards and all site lighting utilizes LED fixtures to maximize energy efficiency. The project site is attractively situated abutting a wooded conservation area and overlooking a pond. There is sufficient parking to accommodate up to 76 employees. Provisions have been made to have separate loading areas with 8' loading door bays for each tenant.

The building's architectural design team was headed by Keith Davignon and Jamie Hughes from Vision 3 Architects. New England Construction (NEC) was the building contractor. Leo Hudon served as NEC's project manager and Guido Giorgi as project supervisor. Narragansett Improvement Co. was responsible for all site development work under the management of Andrew Crowshaw.
