A groundbreaking ceremony was held for the new HealthSouth Rehabilitation Hospital of Western Massachusetts at the Ludlow Mills site on September 19th. The ceremony included Massachusetts Housing and Economic Development secretary Greg Bialecki, congressman Richard Neal along with representatives of HealthSouth, state legislative delegation, the town of Ludlow and Westmass Area Development Corp.

"It is fitting that we celebrate our groundbreaking event during National Rehabilitation Week as our staff and patients work hard to rebuild lives after devastating illness or injury" said CEO Scott Keen. HealthSouth will build a LEED "Silver Certified" (Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design) hospital and has received final approval of their site plans from the town. The LEED certification signifies that the new structure meets and exceeds established "green building" criteria.

"Our new, 53-bed hospital will enable patients in Western Massachusetts to have access to high-quality, cost-effective rehabilitative services," said Peter Mantegazza, president of HealthSouth's Northeast Region. "HealthSouth Rehabilitation Hospital of Western Massachusetts offers the latest rehabilitation treatment and technology and now will be able to provide all-private patient rooms. This project directly aligns with our vision to be the rehabilitative provider of choice for this area."

Westmass is proud to share in this joint announcement with HealthSouth. "The HealthSouth project is a significant step forward for the redevelopment of the site and Westmass looks forward to other significant projects as part of its redevelopment efforts for this 170-acre site," said Delude.
