Meridian Construction to renovate New Hampshire Army National Guard barracks

December 05, 2013 - Northern New England

The New Hampshire Army National Guard barracks will receive a series of renovations this fall and winter, with work expected to be completed next spring.

Meridian Construction, selected by the state to handle the general contracting responsibilities for the project, will perform services that include renovations to the bathrooms, laundry room, boiler rooms and sleeping quarters of two separate structures in the facility. The two structures, called Upper Foss and Lower Foss, are 4,600 and 4,800 s/f in size, respectively, with total project costs estimated at $779,893.

Additional project-related work will include site construction, concrete, masonry, wood and plastics, thermal and moisture protection, finishes, specialties, and sewer and water connections.
