Flanagan of Residential Properties Ltd. receives award

December 12, 2013 - Rhode Island

Tech Collective, Rhode Island's industry association for information technology and bioscience, named Residential Properties Ltd.'s (RPL) vice president of marketing and technology, Tom Flanagan as one of 10 Rhode Island IT practitioners, digital media designers, and entrepreneurs selected as its 2013 Tech10 Award recipients. Honorees were recognized at a celebration event on November 20 at the Roger Williams Park Casino.

Flanagan graduated from the New England Institute of Technology with a degree in Interactive Multimedia, and over the past seven years, has helped to keep RPL on the cutting edge of the real estate industry. In addition, Flanagan is a regular contributor to Inman News, writing a syndicated technology column discussing best practices and trends regarding website design, mobile applications, and online services which can be utilized by the real estate industry.

Individually, Tech10 recognizes Rhode Island IT practitioners and entrepreneurs who excel in their practice, demonstrate a passion for contributing to the success of others, and are pioneering in their technological and career achievements. For the technology community, Tech10 is the opportunity for Rhode Island business and industry to identify its exceptional participants and future leaders.

"Every year, the caliber and diversity of our Tech10 Awards applicants amazes us," said Kathie Shields, executive director of Tech Collective.
