Criterion Engineers presents at National REIT conference

May 01, 2014 - Northern New England

Criterion Engineers, a Maine-based consulting engineering company with more than 40 affiliate offices throughout North America, is not only a leader building inspection engineering services for clients, its experts are often asked to present at leading industry events and write for business publications.

The latest invitation was to speak to 300 attendees at a real estate services conference hosted by American Residential Properties, a fully integrated and internally managed real estate investment company, organized as a real estate investment trust (REIT). Alan Mooney, president of Criterion Engineers and well-known expert in building inspection services, was one of the session leaders of the two day educational event held in Scottsdale, Arizona.

Mooney's presentation entitled, Restore and Refurbish: balancing cost with durability and performance discussed the options for optimizing home performance, explained the difference between service life and practical life and offered advice on repair costs and maintenance cycles.
