Williams joins Wright-Pierce's building design grp.

April 17, 2008 - Construction Design & Engineering

Wright-Pierce has expanded the building design services group with the hiring of architect Ronald Williams, AIA. Wright-Pierce currently offers a range of building design services to municipal clients throughout New England.

Williams is a registered architect with more than ten years experience in all phases of design and building services from initial planning through construction management.

According to Walter Flanagan III, P.E. and manager of the Wright-Pierce building design group, "Ron's range of experience in working with municipal, commercial, and institutional clients will broaden the depth of our architectural practice and provide our clients with even greater service."
