The John Flatley Company names Infinio 2014 Flatley Challenge winner

February 05, 2015 - Northern New England

The John Flatley Company named the winner of the 2014 Flatley Challenge; Infinio, a market leader in data storage performance technology. Infinio will receive one year of free office rent at the John Flatley owned, Nashua Technology Park (NTP) at Gateway Hills and a $10,000 cash prize to be used for fit-up, connectivity and/or related business costs.

Arun Agarwal, Infinio co-founder and CEO said, "We are honored to be the 2014 winner of the Flatley Challenge and look forward to being able to draw on the great engineering talent pool in the Nashua area as our company continues to grow and expand."

The Flatley Challenge is designed to assist entrepreneurs in the fields of IT, communications, storage, connectivity, robotics, medical devices, life sciences and other leading-edge technologies. It is intended to stimulate the development and growth of early-stage companies by providing them both a first-class workspace, plus the opportunity to interact with such world class companies as Dell, Skillsoft, Aspen Technology, Benchmark Electronics, Wind River, Parallel Wireless, HiSoftware, DataGravity, Amphenol TCS and more.

"I saw a need for startups in New Hampshire to be given a chance to succeed," Flatley said. "One way to do this, from my perspective, was to provide promising companies free incubation space and a small monetary incentive. As part of the Nashua community, I wanted to do what I could as a property owner to help promote and grow employment in New Hampshire."
