Delaney, Subber, McDonough and Orpik of Cresa Boston arrange 17,500 s/f office relocation

February 12, 2015 - Front Section

Paul Delaney, Adam Subber, Shawn McDonough, and Andrew Orpik of Cresa Boston recently represented the Massachusetts Eye Research and Surgery Institution (MERSI) in a 17,500 s/f office relocation of its headquarters to 1440 Main St., a three-story, 67,000 s/f building.

Currently occupying 13,000 s/f at 5 Cambridge Center in Cambridge, MERSI needed to expand its operations and upgrade to a larger space. In June, the company plans to occupy a portion of the second floor of the two-building Main Street Corporate Center office complex.

"MERSI has been well served by its original home at 5 Cambridge. However, as this world renowned institution continues to grow, it made sense for us to seriously consider alternatives along Rte. 128. Main Street Corporate Center offers MERSI's employees and patients convenient access is a suburban office setting combined with the unique synergies of other tenants within the park. We look forward to seeing their new facility, as they continue to deliver world class care," said Scott Evans, chief operating officer at MERSI.

The landlord, Crosspoint Associates, was represented by Transwestern | RBJ.
