Metro Walls to construct 108,000 s/f building at Plymouth State University

May 01, 2015 - Northern New England

Metro Walls, a full-service commercial framing and drywall company based in Manchester, N.H. has been contracted by Harvey Construction, Bedford, N.H. to work on Plymouth State University's (PSU) newest campus building.

According to campus officials, the new building called the Active Living, Learn and Wellness (ALLWell) will be the largest classroom on campus at 108,000 s/f.

Metro Walls is responsible for the construction of the exterior wall framing and the hanging and taping of all the drywall, creating a brand new athletic center which when completed will double the size of Plymouth State University's existing field house.

"We are very pleased to work with Harvey Construction on this project for Plymouth State University," said Mike Dion, president, Metro Walls. "We have had a long standing relationship with Harvey Construction that has been built on trust, integrity and our commitment to providing outstanding customer service."
