Sypher joins Eckman Construction as assistant project manager

June 04, 2015 - Northern New England

Eckman Construction has hired Matthew Sypher as an assistant project manager. Sypher will work with the Eckman project management staff to develop and coordinate projects for their clients. It was Sypher's accomplished work history and collaborative spirit that led Eckman vice president John Deloia to add him to their team.

"In a fairly short time, Matt has acquired and developed great skills and experience, working on diverse construction projects throughout the East Coast," said Deloia. "We know Matt will quickly build upon that experience and we expect him to become a key member of our staff - he's a terrific addition to our team."

Among his past accomplishments, Sypher has supervised and managed complex projects, established project plans, generated three-dimensional representations and developed cost estimates for a variety of complicated projects during his time as a project engineer with Hayward Baker, a highly-regarded geotechnical construction firm with over 25 locations across North America.

Sypher holds a bachelor of science degree in Civil Engineering from Stevens Institute of Technology of Hoboken, N.J.
