How a Mass. Project Team achieved BRJP compliance efforts and recruited new talent: A new collaboration model on June 21

May 18, 2018 - Construction Design & Engineering

Boston, MA Thursday, June 21 at 7:30 – 9:30 AM | Madison Park Voc-Tech High School

- How do you demonstrate “best faith compliance efforts” when there are labor shortages in many construction trade crafts?
- Are you starting to feel the impacts of the aging workforce; will it squelch the industry’s economic prosperity?
- Does your HR department struggle with identifying, retaining and creating company loyalty with the next generation of industry talent?
- Are you having difficulty hiring local residents, minorities, females and apprentices to meet new compliance goals?
- How do you report up to your clients when there is a high impracticality of your project complying with the Boston Resident Job Policy?
- Does your company offer a mentorship program with local schools emerging young talent and seasoned professionals?

If you are struggling to answer these questions then come join us in a panel discussion and learn how a project team of owner, construction manager, subcontractors, local schools and a diversity facilitator achieved a comprehensive, professional and accountable workforce development solution. Project panelists: Richard Walsh, president and CEO of Walsh Brothers and Linda Shaughnessy, equal employment opportunity & compliance officer of Walsh Brothers; Paul Dietel, director of capital programs at Harvard Business School; Nicole Richer, founder of The Compliance Mentor Group; Emily Leopold, director of career services & industry partnerships at Benjamin Franklin Institute of Technology; and Vincent Fanuele, carpentry instructor at Madison Park Technical Vocational High School.
