

Randolph Savings Bank board of directors names Drummey president and CEO

August 13, 2008 - Front Section

The Randolph Savings Bank board of directors has elected Thomas Drummey president and chief executive officer to succeed Richard Boonisar who has retired. Drummey had been the bank's executive vice president and chief operating officer.

"Having Drummey follow Boonisar will allow the bank to enjoy a seamless transition of top management," says Roy Conrad, chairman. "He has worked very closely with Boonisar as executive vice president and is familiar with every aspect of the bank's operation. He has been a big part of the success and stability we have enjoyed over the past year."

Drummey joined Randolph Savings Bank in 2000 and was senior vice president, senior loan officer before being named chief operating officer in 2006. Drummey is a member of the FDIC New Immigration Alliance Task Force, the Mass. Bankers Association and the Mass. Mortgage Bankers Association.
