Mutual of America opens 4,895 s/f regional office at 500 Exchange Street in Providence

November 08, 2019 - Rhode Island

Providence, RI Mutual of America Financial Group, a leading financial services company specializing in retirement plans and investments, opened a 4,895 s/f new regional office in downtown at 500 Exchange St. The company, which has served customers in the state for decades, moved into its new office as part of the continued expansion of its retirement plan business in the state and throughout New England.

Mutual of America's decision to open the office took into consideration discussions with various government officials, including governor Gina Raimondo and Providence mayor Jorge Elorza, and Rhode Island Commerce. The company is looking to access the talent pipeline in the greater Providence metro region.

"Expanding our presence in Providence reflects our ongoing commitment to customers in Rhode Island, allowing us to enhance the level of quality personal service we provide and that they expect from us," said John Greed, chairman, president and CEO of Mutual of America. "We appreciate the gracious welcome given to us by the city and state, and look forward to becoming a vital and visible part of the city's thriving and growing business community."
