Boston, MA MassDevelopment has issued a $77.255 million tax-exempt bond on behalf of Simmons University, which will use proceeds to renovate and convert LeFavour Hall and a portion of the Main College Building into a new science center. The updated facility, expected to be complete in late 2021, will feature a reconfigured library and new labs and a simulation center, classrooms, offices, and meetings spaces needed to support the chemistry, biology, physics, nursing, physical therapy, and other programs within the College of Natural, Behavioral, and Health Sciences. The bond was sold through a public offering underwritten by Barclays Capital Inc.

Simmons University will also use bond proceeds to upgrade classrooms, offices, labs, and support spaces in its Main College Building, Palace Road Building, and Management Building.

“MassDevelopment is pleased to be a financing partner for the Commonwealth’s world-class colleges and universities as they renovate or improve their campuses,” said MassDevelopment president and CEO Lauren Liss. “Simmons University’s new science center will offer an improved educational experience for current students and help the school attract prospective students to its leading science programs.”
