Integrated Interiors expands to include exteriors

October 16, 2020 - Construction Design & Engineering

Boston, MA Integrated Interiors (II) has rebranded, adopted a new logo, and will be known as Integrated at Work (IAW). The organization's name change reflects the company's expanded product offering to include both interior and now exterior architectural products and engineered solutions.

As a one-source solution provider, the decision to rebrand allows IAW to fulfill the market need for successful architectural integration of both interior and exterior systems and ensure both spaces work as one. IAW now provides a complete breadth of exterior products that complements its already robust interior offering. This expanded offering allows the team to assist with the consult/design, procurement, project management, and installation of any commercial building project.

"We aim to over-service our construction partners to ensure project execution is seamless. We methodically coordinate work with the adjacent building architecture to deliver considerable value no matter the project's complexity. Integrated at Work provides an attractive solution inside and out. Working behind the scenes, our jobs require fewer contracts, less insurance, and fewer trades on site," said David Atwood, general manager of Integrated at Work.

IAW takes a consultative approach and - by creating two divisions, Interiors at Work and Exteriors at Work – allows each division to focus on providing the best solutions to its customers. The company represents highly respected manufacturers to provide the smartest and most economical solutions customized for each client.
