Alvaro Alonso, general manager, Beiersdorf North America said, “As we imagined our new work place for the future, after over a year of working from home, we knew we needed a flexible space, suitable for different working styles and needs. Most importantly, we wanted a dynamic, inspiring work environment that will allow our employees space to connect and collaborate. 301 Tresser Blvd., Stamford, Conn. will provide all of this for us in a fully customizable, safe and health-focused space.”

Attracted by the visibility of Stamford Plaza, firms ranging from asset managers to life sciences companies inked deals for 35,000 s/f in the fourth quarter of 2020. The one million s/f office campus, located on Tresser Blvd. alongside I-95, was acquired by RFR in 2007 and the iconic properties are home to many of the state’s leading businesses. The Stamford Plaza campus is situated on a 2.5 acre landscaped plaza complete with gardens, a putting green, bocce court, fountains, outdoor dining and lounge seating.

RFR recently completed extensive capital improvements at Stamford Plaza engaging Stamford-based architecture firm, CPG architects, to reimagine lobbies of 3 Stamford Plaza and 4

Stamford Plaza. Both properties now feature lobbies finished in rift sawn white oak wood and include display artwork by Peter Halley, Kim MacConnel and Sean Landers.

The renovation added a new cafeteria, The Terrace Café, which is a 130-seat restaurant designed by Meaghan Apfel's Carnelian Studio and operated by Guckenheimer, an award-winning international catering firm that specializes in creating custom dining experiences for corporate users. The campus' amenities include a fitness center, teleconferencing centers, attached parking garages, and dry-cleaning services. Stamford Plaza is located off I-95 and near the train station (Stamford Transportation Center).
