Learn About Upcoming Public Projects, Oct. 1

September 18, 2008 - Construction Design & Engineering

Around the country, construction spending by federal, state and local governments has reached record levels, and Massachusetts is no exception. Recently the Legislature authorized borrowing $16 billion for public projects across the state, including $2 billion for higher education capital projects, $1.6 billion for courthouses and public safety facilities, and more than $500 million per year for school projects.

Find out now much of that money will be spent, at our Oct. 1 business breakfast featuring officials from the Division of Capital Asset Management (DCAM), the Massachusetts State College Building Authority (MSCBA), and the Mass. School Building Authority (MSBA).

Call ASM for details.
