As chief people officer, Lewis will be responsible for all aspects of human resources on a national scale and will work with Suffolk's executive leaders to drive company growth, performance improvement, professional development and operational excellence throughout the country.

"We are thrilled to promote Katy and Jackie to these key executive roles," said John Fish, chairman and CEO of Suffolk. "I am confident their thoughtful, experienced and visionary leadership will help us strengthen our brand presence and continue to provide an unmatched employee experience to successfully recruit and retain some of the brightest talent in our industry. Their passion, strong work ethic and understanding of Suffolk's culture and value proposition make them well suited for these important roles as we expand our operation into key new sectors and markets."

Prior to joining Suffolk, Ms. O'Neil was executive vice president for the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce, where she managed the chamber's 100 annual programs and events. She also led business development and membership retention efforts, as well as the creation of the Chamber's Leadership initiative which includes programs for senior executives, high-potential managers and emerging female professionals.
