includes seating and various games, including a Bocce ball court.

The TOBYs are the commercial real estate industry's highest recognition honoring excellence in commercial building leasing, management and operations in specific categories of building size or type. In addition to the TOBY award, CBRE's Lisa Iannelli-Winkler was honored as Property Manager of the Year and Burt Hicks was named Building Engineer of the Year.

"Winning a TOBY award is a testament to the dedication of a host of people from the ownership, leasing and management sides," said CBRE's David Block, who spearheads leasing at the property. "We are extremely proud of the entire team for their hard work and collaboration in making Stamford Towers a true stand-out in the market and for earning one of the highest honors in our industry. We are also very proud of the recognition for the amazing work Lisa and Burt have done."

"At Stamford Towers, our management team, supported by our amazing ownership, are working tirelessly to create an environment where our tenant's employees want to return to the office," said Iannelli-Winkler. "We know our tenants love what we do here and are gratified that our efforts have been further recognized by BOMA with this TOBY Award."

The BOMA competition consists of three levels of judging. The first level of competition is held at the local level by BOMA associations. Winning local entries such as 680 Washington can advance to the regional level in each of the eight North American regions of BOMA International. Regional winners advance to the international level.
