Norwell, MA South Shore Habitat for Humanity, which has delivered quality housing in partnership with families in need for the past 39 years, has received a donation of electrical supplies from Granite City Electric for its local homebuilding project on Poquanticut Rd. in Easton, Mass.

Through the Granite City Electric Partnership program, four other Massachusetts affiliates of Habitat for Humanity were also chosen to receive in-kind electrical supplies for home construction projects: Greater Springfield Habitat for Humanity, Habitat for Humanity of Greater Plymouth, Essex County Habitat for Humanity, and Habitat for Humanity of Greater Lowell.

Steve Argyle, vice president of branch sales for Granite City Electric said, “Our company has a strong commitment to giving back and feels privileged to contribute to so many charities, in particular, to an organization like Habitat for Humanity that assists so many families throughout Massachusetts.”

“We are grateful to Granite City Electric for supporting South Shore Habitat for Humanity as part of this growing partnership. It is because of philanthropic companies like Granite City Electric that we are able to make the dream of homeownership a reality for local families in need of safe, affordable housing,” said Erin McGough, executive director.
