Cromwell, CT The Connecticut CCIM Chapter is presenting its MidYear Symposium, "AI Impact on Commercial Real Estate Analytics”, taking place on June 5, 2025, from 8:00 AM to 10:30 AM at TPC River Highlands.

This signature event gathers leading experts in commercial real estate analytics to explore how artificial intelligence is transforming decision-making, workflows, and risk management across the industry.

Featured speakers include Craig Scott, partner at Hinckley Allen, who leads the firm’s intellectual property and artificial intelligence practice groups. Scott will delve into the legal challenges AI presents in commercial real estate. His presentation will explore the risks and liabilities associated with AI-driven analytics and how they impact errors and omissions (E&O) policy coverage. Scott’s insights will provide real estate professionals with a deeper understanding of how AI affects compliance, licensing, and data security in the industry.

Also presenting is Joe McBride, senior director at Moody’s Analytics, who will offer a comprehensive look at Moody’s approach to Generative AI and its application in commercial mortgage-backed securities, CRE investing, lending, brokerage, valuation, and risk management. With his extensive background in developing financial models, McBride’s discussion will highlight how AI enhances market forecasting and investment decisions, helping commercial real estate professionals refine their strategies.

The symposium will be moderated by Stanley Gniazdowski, CRE, CCIM, president of Realty Concepts, Inc., an internationally recognized real estate consultant.

Advance registration is required. Interested attendees are encouraged to register now and take advantage of discounted early-bird pricing. Event details and registration can be found at www.ctccim.com.
