Fox RPM releases FoxFMS and hires Coe to implement

December 31, 2008 - Front Section

Fox RPM Corp., which provides project and relocation management services, has released a software platform called FoxFMS to help clients handle space, personnel and asset management as well as office churn.

FoxFMS facilities management software is an application platform which Fox utilizes to help clients plan and maintain their space through a graphical representation of their floor plans, personnel and assets.

Fox has also hired Massi Coe to round out the team of space management experts focused on implementing FoxFMS on behalf of clients. Coe brings six years of experience in supporting facility and space management operations in addition to his knowledge of space planning, move coordination, software training, and exposure to how companies use facility management software on a wide scale. Coe previously worked at Fidelity where he was responsible for supporting the company's space management software initiatives for its worldwide real estate portfolio.

"We not only use FoxFMS as a platform for our everyday project needs, but we also have clients that continue to use it after we have left their facility," said Peter Stein, VP at Fox RPM. "Having Massi Coe on board to spearhead client implementations of Fox FMS will make our customers' lives easier which at the end of the day is the most important service a company can provide."

Currently, FoxFMS is being utilized on several of its regional and national accounts, including the Broad Institute, Akamai, American Student Assistance, TaylorMade and Reebok.
