David Gergen addresses the Real Estate Finance Assn.

June 03, 2009 - Connecticut

On May 21st at the Hartford Hilton, David Gergen spoke before a crowd to the Hartford Chapter of the Real Estate Finance Association. Gergen is a professor of public service at Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government and director of its Center for Public Leadership. He is also editor-at-large for U.S. News & World Report and a senior political analyst for CNN. In earlier years, he served as a White House advisor to Presidents Nixon, Ford, Reagan and Clinton.

The board of directors and sponsor level members were invited to a meet and greet with him prior to the public appearance. The discussion focused on the affects of the economy on commercial real estate and a macro view of the financial markets. Gergen addressed the membership and provided his insights on the first hundred days of the Obama Presidency, discussing domestic and foreign affairs as well as addressing comparisons to former administrations.

The crowd had an opportunity to ask questions on a variety of subjects, from taxation policy, the current situation in Iran, the financial crisis today versus the 1930s and the 1970s. Gergen commented on the need for strong foreign policy leadership and that Hillary Clinton has performed quite well in her role as Secretary of State. He also commented on the differences between being a debtor nation and a lender nation with the latter being the more favorable.

Following the discussion, he remained for the networking session with the members.

Mark Duclos, REFA's Hartford Chapter president, said "REFA was honored to have David Gergen as the guest speaker for the evening event. With years of experience in a number of administrations, Gergen offered us a unique perspective on the Obama administration's first 100 days."

The Hartford Chapter chair of the program committee, Tyler Brown with Cornerstone Real Estate, worked with his committee and Vin Bergin of People's United Bank, to organize this event.
