New study shows rising compensation levels for Certified Property Managers

November 26, 2007 - Connecticut

Real estate management professionals holding the Certified Property Manager (CPM) designation earned median total compensation of $103,000 in 2006, primarily from base salary for their management duties but also including additional income from sales and leasing commissions as well as other real estate related activities. By comparison, CPM designees' median total compensation was $95,000 in 2003, $83,000 in 1999, and $50,800 back in 1984, underscoring a history of steady income growth.

On a separate note, those pursuing the CPM designation, termed CPM Candidates, earned $75,000 in median total compensation last year versus $73,000 in 2003, $64,000 in 1999, and $35,000 back in 1984.

These are among the just-released findings of the 2007 edition of the Certified Property Manager Profile and Compensation Study conducted by the Institute of Real Estate Management (IREM). The Institute awards the CPM designation to real estate and asset managers who have met strict criteria in the areas of education, examination, experience and a commitment to uphold the IREM Code of Professional Ethics.

IREM periodically surveys its CPM Members and Candidates - of whom there currently are approximately 8,560 and 3,150, respectively, in the United States and abroad - to compile, analyze and compare the most critical components of real estate managers' compensation and benefit packages. The published survey findings provide detailed comparisons based on portfolio size, area of management specialization, and level and types of experience and explain how each of these variables affects salary levels and the total compensation package.

Among other key findings of the 2007 edition of the study:

- *â€€,Regionally, CPM designees and Candidates located in the Pacific Coast states earned the highest total compensation. In contrast, CPM designees in the Southwest earned the least, as did Candidates located in the Midwest/North Central region.

- *â€€,The average CPM designee is 49 years old, has earned a college degree, works for a full service real estate or property management company, and averages 22.4 years of experience.

- *â€€,The average CPM Candidate is 42 years old, has earned a college degree, works for a full service real estate or property management company, and averages 13.9 years of experience.

- *â€€,51.6% of CPM designees are male, whereas 62% of Candidates are female.

- *â€€,About 52% of CPM designees and 53% of Candidates, respectively, are employed by or associated with a property management division or firm of 50 or less employees.

- *â€€,CPM designees typically hold executive or property manager/supervisor positions within their firms. In contrast, while many Candidates occupy more senior positions, more than four in ten define themselves simply as property managers.

*â€œCPM designees and Candidates who characterized themselves as owners, partners, presidents/CEOs and directors reported receiving considerably greater compensation than other respondents.

*â€œOn the other end of the spectrum, those in both groups who view themselves simply as site managers reported receiving the lowest levels of compensation.

*â€œCPM designees who work for development companies, full service real estate companies, REITs, and investment companies typically receive higher compensation than those who work for other types of employers.

*â€œSimilarly, CPM Candidates who work for development companies, REITs, and investment companies were the best compensated.

*â€œOffice buildings account for the largest share of portfolios managed by CPM designees and Candidates, followed by conventionally financed apartments.

*â€œSalary and total compensation for CPM designees and Candidates usually increase with the number of residential units or commercial s/f managed.

*â€œCompensation for both CPM designees and Candidates typically increases as their age increases, up to age 60.

The study findings summarize the results of the "CPM/Candidate Confidential Inventory and Salary Questionnaire" fielded online by the IREM Research Department in January 2007. Findings are based on responses received from 1,134 CPM designees and 583 CPM Candidates. Price and Ordering Information
